COX FACES RIGHT ABOUT.

Reins Gazette

The outstanding feature of the long address by Governor James M. Cox, delivered at the Rialto theatre, was his complete reversal with regard to the league of nations reservations. Last January Cox denounced the United States senators who were voting against accepting the movement without reservations. He called them cowards and in his use of epithets was only a little behind President Wilson himself. After his nomination by the San Francisco convention Governor Cox went away to see the president and to get away from the White House breathing fire against any senator Republican or Democrat, who would dare exchange one word of the acquiescence in President Wilson's best, but for the covenant with reservations.

As the Democratic candidate has increased his distance from Washington and has learned what the people of the United States really think about the league of nations and Mr. Wilson, he has grown more mild in his criticisms and has suddenly thrown to the wind all his previous denunciations and now stands fair square, not for the league as drawn by President Wilson and as favored by the Democratic national convention at President Wilson's best, but for the covenant with reservations.

Let us quote from the telegram he read and which he said he had sent to Professor Irving Fisher at Yale.

"I am determined to secure the earliest possible entrance into the league of nations with the least possible delay and with the least possible reservations needed to accomplish the result."

"Least possible" reservations, he says, but however he may qualify the word, he admits that reservations are necessary. He goes on to say that any reservations must be such as will not "nullify and destroy" the covenant. He says nothing about nullifying the great American republic but he knows that the senate of the United States will never permit any reservation to be adopted that will "nullify and destroy" the constitution of the United States. He knows what Senator Harding said in his Constitution day address at Marion is true, every word of it, and what Article X of the Wilson covenant would do would be to destroy the constitutional powers of congress. First consider the senate's proposed reservations in brief:

First: The United States will be the sole judge, should it wish to withdraw from the league of whether it has filled its international obligations.

Second: The United States refuses to employ its military or naval forces to preserve the territory or independence of any other member of the league or to use the economic boycott for that purpose.

Third: No mandate shall be accepted by the United States without consent of congress.

Fourth: The United States reserves the right to decide for itself questions of the tariff, immigration, coastwise traffic, etc.

Fifth: The United States will not submit to any international court any question that it thinks might involve the Monroe doctrine.

Sixth: Seventh and Eighth: No person shall be appointed to represent the United States in diplomatic matters except under an act of congress specifying his duties, and in the event of reparations and export regulations concerning this country nothing shall be valid unless agreed to by congress.

Ninth: The United States shall not be obligated to any expense for salaries, etc., in connection with the league unless congress shall consent.

Tenth: There shall be no limitation of armaments in the United States without consent of congress.

The eleventh article deals with trading with covenant-breaking states, the twelfth with limitation of the right of American citizens abroad, the thirteenth refuses assent to the supreme council until congress shall have considered the same.

The fourteenth reservation insists that the United States will not participate in any formation of the league in any way until she shall be awarded the same number of votes as any other single power therein may have acquired by reason of self-governing colonies or dependencies.

Space is far too limited for the paper to reprint the famous reservations in full, but it would perhaps repay any citizen to write to the representatives or senators in congress to obtain copies. There is not one word in them, not a syllable, nor a line, that would "stultify or destroy" the league of nations. But there are words—fourteen separate sections of them—that would preserve the independence of international action heretofore enjoyed by the United States, and which, by the memory of Washington, of Lincoln and of Roosevelt, we intend to retain forever.

Let Governor Cox deny or let any other Democrat attempt it, that the senate of the United States was animated solely by the determination to preserve the freedom of the United States to act as she has always acted—that is, as the people, judging each matter by itself, shall, through their own duly elected representatives and senators in congress, decide for themselves. They do not want and they will not have their minds made up for them by foreign powers.

In the language of the Republican platform, the American people stand for agreement among the nations to keep the peace of the world, but they insist that such an agreement shall not be drawn as to involve them as parties to any quarrel. They will join not as participants, but as peace-makers, and to be peace-makers they must be independent.

The solicitude of Candidate Cox for the welfare of our soldiers is rather ludicrous when the editorial policy of Newspaper-Proprietor Cox is recalled. The attitude before we entered the war of such papers as the Dayton, Ohio, News, opposed as they were to preparedness, cost us dearly in the end in precious lives sacrificed across the sea because we had to go to war without adequate drill and equipment.

The Democratic president may still hold to his expressed opinion that the cause of the league of nations is greater than the senate and greater than the government, and the Democratic candidate may share that opinion, but the people of the United States are disposed to demand that the safety and prosperity of America shall come first with the American government, and that the well-being of the American people shall not be sacrificed or neglected for a visionary and impractical internationalism.
